

Methodological challenges in the use of anthropometric data

Jat Sandhu

This presentation will highlight some of the challenges in using longitudinal anthropometric data measures in summarizing the growth process. The data originates from a historical cohort study that is investigating the early life origins of adult health outcomes. Examples of methodological issues will be drawn from the associations observed in this cohort between adolescent growth and adulthood risk for obesity, insulin resistance and cancer.